Section 01

Your starting line

Can you move as fast as your business is changing?

The pace of change is not waiting for you to feel ready. Priorities shift. Information is incomplete. Pressure rises. You may know what good leadership looks like. Being able to access it consistently when the moment demands it is another thing.

Athleadership® draws on neuroscience and performance psychology to turn insight into deliberate practice. Knowing what effective leadership looks like is different from accessing it when pressure rises. Over the next season, you will practice decisions in Arena scenarios and drills, apply one chosen behavior in real work, and use your 90-Day Way to keep your actions and progress visible. Practice is how you begin to condition a more dependable response.

YOUR NORTH STAR

Can I access my best decision-making and leadership as conditions change and pressure increases?

Your starting point is not your identity

Every leader develops patterns. Some rely on instinct. Others on discipline, experience, or the ability to respond quickly. These strengths may have helped you succeed. But when conditions change, the same patterns may not always produce the results you need.

Athleadership is about recognizing what you rely on, understanding when it serves you and when it limits you, and conditioning the behaviors that help you respond differently. Your starting score is not a verdict. It is a signal of where your next opportunity to grow begins.

Your score is not your identity, and success is not perfection. Growth becomes a priority when you keep showing up, practice deliberately, notice your response, and adjust. Progress is what matters.

Before you read

Your Leadership Conditioning Index and six scores appeared on the last page of the survey. This guide is the same for everyone. Your scores make it yours. Keep them next to you as you read.

Your scores

Type your scores into the boxes and mark the level each one falls in, or print this page and write them by hand.

Section 02

How to read your scores

Your Leadership Conditioning Index

Your Leadership Conditioning Index (LCI) summarizes selected behaviors measured in your assessment. It brings together your foundation (M.V.P.), your conditioning (the Core 4), and your leadership in action (Application). A higher score means you reported using those behaviors more consistently in relevant situations. It does not measure your overall leadership ability or predict business results.

Your LCI gives you one view of your starting point. Your six scores show what sits behind it and where you can act. Section 07 uses those scores, not your LCI, to help you choose your first rep.

Your six scores

SCORE	WHAT IT COVERS
M.V.P.	Your mission, vision and purpose, and your organization's values in action
Agility	Adapting when the plan changes (selected self-reported behaviors)
Resilience	Recovering and re-engaging after setbacks (selected self-reported behaviors)
Alignment	Clarifying priorities and aligning with others (selected self-reported behaviors)
Wellbeing	Sustaining focus and capacity to perform (selected self-reported behaviors)
Application	Carrying your leadership into real work, including under change, pressure and uncertainty

How a score is built

Each answer is converted to points: Almost always 100, Usually 75, Sometimes 50, Rarely 25, Never 0. On the M.V.P. questions, "I don't have one written" and "I'm not clear on my purpose yet" count as 0. Each score is the average of the questions in that area. Your answers reflect the past two weeks.

What your score range means

Build the Foundation
Below 50

BE AWARE. BUILD THE REP.

You reported these behaviors less often. Notice when they are needed and practice one deliberate response.

Strengthen the Core
50 to 74

BUILD CONSISTENCY. EXPAND CAPACITY.

You reported these behaviors in some situations. Practice making one response more dependable.

Play at the Next Level
75 and above

RAISE THE DEMAND. ELEVATE OTHERS.

You reported these behaviors often. Practice sustaining them under greater demands and supporting others.

These levels describe reported consistency, not fixed labels or stages of personal worth. They are invitations to practice, not diagnoses or proof of performance under pressure. The same ranges apply to the LCI and all six scores.

Section 03 YOUR FOUNDATION

Your M.V.P. foundation

This is the foundation part of your LCI. Your Mission, Vision and Purpose (M.V.P.) help you make choices that reflect what matters most, especially when good priorities compete. Values become visible through decisions, not simply statements. Your M.V.P. score reflects both the use of your anchors and your organization's values in action. Having an anchor written is different from using it.

Build the Foundation
Below 50

Define what anchors your decisions. Practice using mission, vision, purpose and values when priorities compete.

Strengthen the Core
50 to 74

Make your anchors visible in everyday decisions, especially when competing demands challenge them.

Play at the Next Level
75 and above

Use your anchors to navigate complex trade-offs and help others lead with greater clarity.

YOUR NEXT REP

If an M.V.P. anchor is not yet defined, write a working version. Then choose one decision this week and ask: "What would my M.V.P. have me do here?" Before acting, name the value you want to demonstrate. Afterward, ask whether your behavior matched it.

Section 04 YOUR CONDITIONING

Your Core 4™ conditioning

Your Core 4 scores summarize how often you reported selected behaviors over the past two weeks. The capabilities named below describe what you will explore and practice in the Arena; they are not separate diagnoses or individual capability scores. Use your score as a starting signal, then choose one behavior to practice and observe in real work.

AGILITY Adapt Through Change

Condition cognitive flexibility, emotional agility under stress and decision-making in ambiguity. Adapt your thinking, regulate your response and choose a useful action when conditions shift.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Notice when a change triggers rigid thinking or a rushed reaction. Pause, consider another perspective and choose one next decision without waiting for certainty.	Practice shifting your thinking and regulating your response when information is incomplete. Make timely decisions across more uncertain situations.	Navigate competing signals and higher-stakes ambiguity while helping others think flexibly, stay composed and move forward.

YOUR NEXT REP

When a plan changes, name one assumption to reconsider, take a moment to steady your response, and make one timely decision with the information available. Notice what you did differently.

RESILIENCE Champion Under Pressure

Condition recovery capacity, emotional bounce-back and adaptive learning from adversity. A setback becomes insight you can use when you reset, learn and re-engage.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Recognize what a setback does to your emotions and momentum. Practice a short reset, identify one lesson and re-engage.	Make your emotional bounce-back and recovery more reliable. Use what adversity teaches you to adjust your next response.	Sustain recovery through prolonged pressure, translate adversity into learning and model constructive re-engagement for others.

YOUR NEXT REP

After a setback, notice your emotional response, choose a reset, and ask: “What did this teach me, and what will I do next?” Put one insight into action.

ALIGNMENT Purpose-Driven Performance

Condition goal clarity and prioritization, communication alignment and collaboration agility. Know what matters most, make it clear to others and adjust together when priorities compete.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Identify what matters most, communicate one priority clearly and confirm the next action with the people involved.	Improve prioritization and shared understanding when goals compete. Invite different perspectives and adjust how you collaborate.	Align people across competing priorities and boundaries, keeping purpose, communication and coordinated action clear under pressure.

YOUR NEXT REP

Name the most important outcome, communicate one clear priority and invite a colleague's perspective. Confirm the next action and who owns it.

WELLBEING Sustainable Energy Performance

Condition physical readiness, emotional recovery and reset, and behavioral boundaries and focus. Manage your energy and attention so you can sustain performance when demands rise.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Notice when physical energy, emotions or distractions affect performance. Practice one reset and one boundary that protects focus.	Make readiness, recovery and focus practices repeatable during demanding weeks. Set and honor boundaries before energy is depleted.	Sustain energy and focused judgment as responsibility grows, and model boundaries and recovery practices that support team performance.

YOUR NEXT REP

Notice one signal that your energy or focus is slipping. Take a deliberate reset and set one practical boundary that protects your next important decision or task.

Your leadership in action

APPLICATION

Carry it into real work

Your Application score summarizes self-reported behaviors in real work, including decisions, working with your manager and team, and responding when conditions change or information is incomplete. It is not a direct observation of your performance. Use it to consider where to practice your next rep.

Build the Foundation
Below 50

Practice accessing one effective leadership behavior in a real moment of pressure or uncertainty.

Strengthen the Core
50 to 74

Make your best leadership more dependable across changing conditions and difficult decisions.

Play at the Next Level
75 and above

Extend your effectiveness into higher-stakes situations while helping others perform under pressure.

YOUR NEXT REP

When conditions change or pressure rises, ask yourself the North Star question. Make one decision using what you know, then identify the behavior someone could observe in your response.

Your North Star questions

Three Application questions address your North Star directly: thinking clearly when direction changes, using your best judgment under pressure, and seeing a way forward without all the answers. You will revisit these questions at the end of the experience.

Section 06

From practice to performance

1	2	3	4	5
KNOW IT →	ACCESS IT →	DO IT CONSISTENTLY →	HOLD IT UNDER PRESSURE →	TRANSFER TO PERFORMANCE

In the Arena, you will practice the Core 4 through scenarios and drills: adapting your thinking and decisions through change; recovering and learning from setbacks; aligning people around what matters; and protecting the energy and focus needed to perform. Then carry a chosen behavior into real work through your 90-Day Way. Ask your manager or a trusted colleague to observe your response, give specific feedback and help you practice again.

Each source offers a different view: your baseline and post-assessment capture self-reported frequency; drills give you opportunities to practice; your 90-Day Way helps record real-work actions; and feedback from your manager or another trusted person may add observations. None alone proves a change in business results. Together, they help you reflect on progress.

Progress is not a perfect rep or a higher number alone. Look for specific changes in what you do: a timely decision, a reset after a setback, a clearer commitment, or a boundary you actually keep. Notice what happened, ask for feedback, and repeat.

Section 07

Choose your first rep

Choose one conditioning opportunity and one rep to practice in real work. Use your scores to guide your choice, then make growth a priority through deliberate practice, feedback and visible action. What matters is how you respond, not simply what you know.

1. Find your conditioning opportunity. Look at your four Core 4 scores. Start with your lowest as a potential area for more consistent practice. Its level in Section 04 offers a starting focus; its Next Rep gives you an action to try. The score does not tell you which individual course capability is weak.

2. Choose where you will practice. If two Core 4 scores are tied or within 10 points, choose the behavior most likely to be tested over the next two weeks. Name a real decision, setback, competing priority or demanding week where you can practice it.

3. Check your foundation. If your M.V.P. score is below 50, or an anchor is not yet written, add the M.V.P. rep from Section 03. Your mission, vision, purpose and values help guide your choices. Move beyond knowing what matters to demonstrating it through decisions.

4. Practice where it counts. Compare Application with your four Core 4 scores. If it is lower than all four, consider practicing your chosen rep especially when change, pressure or uncertainty rises; this difference is a prompt for reflection, not proof of a transfer gap. Otherwise, work on consistency. Decide what another person could see you do differently.

5. Use your strengths. Bring others into your growth. Your highest Core 4 score is a behavior you report using relatively often. Draw on it to support your rep. Tell your manager or a trusted colleague what you plan to practice and in which situation. Ask them to notice a specific action, share feedback, and help you decide what to repeat or adjust.

If all four Core 4 scores are 75 or above

Choose a strength to test under greater demands: higher stakes, less certainty or more people depending on the outcome. Playing at the next level means continuing to grow, not assuming you have arrived.

Keep showing up. Measure progress.

You will not get every rep right. That is part of conditioning. Notice what happened, learn from it and practice again. Over the next two weeks, look for progress in your decisions, recovery after setbacks, clarity with others or the boundaries you keep. Bring that evidence into your 90-Day Way. Success is not perfection; it is more consistent behavior in the moments that matter.

Your first conditioning commitment

One behavior I will practice:

One situation where I will practice it:

What someone will see me doing differently:

Who can help me practice and notice progress:

Section 08

Your closing reflection

Before your first session, choose one real moment in which you want to respond differently over the next season. Bring it into the Arena. Practice one behavior, notice what happened, and invite your manager or a trusted colleague to observe and offer feedback.

The goal is not to finish more content or perform every rep perfectly. It is to build a response you can access more consistently when the moment comes. Return to your North Star, use your 90-Day Way to notice your actions, and keep practicing. Your progress becomes visible in what you do.

Built From Within. Conditioned to Win.
